

IPD Academy: An Introduction

THE INNOVATIVE Program Delivery (IPD) office equips decisionmakers and practitioners with the tools and knowledge they need to explore and implement innovative strategies to deliver transportation programs and projects. Innovation can help overcome resource constraints, address energy and environmental considerations, and promote efficiencies in program delivery.

Successful accomplishment of the IPD office's mission demands a knowledgeable and confident U.S. Department of Transportation (USDOT) workforce who can effectively engage with our State and local partners on these topics. Additionally, expertise in the new strategies will help our professional staff integrate IPD strategies into their specific disciplines and focus areas. The IPD office is establishing the IPD Academy to build this internal USDOT capacity.

Virginia's Capital Beltway Project used a number of IPD innovations.

These professional development opportunities not only support individual career aspirations, but they also help form IPD champions within the Department—staff who are comfortable in suggesting to their State and local partners new ways of delivering the surface transportation program.

The IPD Academy began its operation by offering select courses through its partnership with the National Highway Institute. To date, it has provided four introductory courses via close to a dozen 2-hour Webinar sessions.

The IPD office will deliver training to State and local transportation agencies through its Division offices and in collaboration with the AASHTO Center for Excellence in Project Finance. ■

In FY2009, over 350 registrations for IPD Academy courses were recorded. Students from 46 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico participated in courses covering public-private partnerships, project finance, and congestion pricing.

When fully operational, the Academy will provide a comprehensive selection of courses and curricula. These courses will be offered via Webinars and may also be combined to suit the unique requirements of our field offices. In addition, the Academy will offer rotational assignments, as well as opportunities to serve in a speakers' bureau and to provide expert assistance on special IPD projects, for employees who have built their expertise and can serve as a resource to others.

In FY2010, the Academy launched a special capacity-building program to provide training to Division Administrators and Financial Managers so that they can better support their State partners in implementing GARVEE and SIB programs.

In preparation for new States taking advantage of the TIFIA program, a series of courses will be offered to help Division offices better understand the specific, and oftentimes unique, requirements attached to TIFIA projects.

IPD ACADEMY

Quick Facts

- Training through Webinars, on-demand courses, and tailored workshops.
- Professional development opportunities.
- Officially open in December 2009.

Contact

IPD Academy
Thay Bishop
404-562-3695
thay.bishop@fhwa.dot.gov

U.S. Department of Transportation
Federal Highway Administration